Year opened: 1989 Acres: 1,568
Highlights: Hiking, biking, horseback riding, bird-watching, 3.6 miles of paved bikepath.
Did you know? In 1799 Spanish explorers named the Carquinez Strait from the Greek word for crab.

Fees—There are no fees at Carquinez Shoreline.

VEGETATION Carquinez Strait Regional Shoreline consists of open, rolling grasslands, wooded ravines, eucalyptus-shaded meadows, and river shoreline.

The major plant communities are composed of plant species typical of annual grassland, oak woodland, and coastal scrub vegetation. Localized wooded communities with oak and oak/bay woodland and buckeye can be found in protected east-facing slopes and ravines.

WILDLIFE The park's grasslands provide habitat to western meadowlark, horned lark, house finch, western bluebird, and American goldfinch. Valley oaks offer nest sites for raptors, great horned owl, and barn owl. Cooper's hawks use the riparian ravines for nesting. Mammals include the gray fox, mule deer, raccoon, eastern fox squirrel, and other species. Small rodents are prey to gopher snakes and western garter snakes.

TOPOGRAPHY The parkland comprises 1,568 acres of bluffs and shoreline along Carquinez Scenic Drive between Crockett and the hillsides overlooking Martinez. The coastal hills rise steeply to 750 feet above Carquinez Strait. From the highest elevations, the view includes the marshland of Benicia State Recreation Area to the north across Carquinez Strait. From along the Franklin Ridge Loop Trail and the California Riding and Hiking Trail, hikers can see Mt. Tamalpais to the west and Mt. Diablo to the southeast. Looking south from this high point are the ridges of Briones and Las Trampas Regional Parks. Eckley Pier is accessible from the Bull Valley Staging Area.

The trail network provides canyon views and ridgetop vistas. At the Bull Valley Staging Area shoreline, the remnants of a late-1800s brickworks, grain wharf, and resort recall the historic character of the site. The sights and sounds of tugboats along the waterway are a part of the charm of Carquinez Strait Regional Shoreline. No fishing license is required for fishing; striped bass and sturgeon are caught from the pier. Note that dogs and barbecues are not allowed on the pier.
