Native American Past

Black Diamond Mines Regional Preserve is the ancestral homeland of three Bay Miwok speaking tribes: Ompin, Volvon, and Julpun. Since time immemorial, the Bay Miwok people have maintained a strong connection to these lands.

Ranching History

Before the discovery of coal, cattle ranching was the major industry in this area. After the mines closed, some miners turned to ranching. Abandoned buildings became barns; railroad ties were used as fence posts; and boilers were converted into water troughs.

Coal Mining History

From the 1850s to the early 1900s, small coal mining towns (Nortonville, Somersville, Stewartville, West Hartley, and Judsonville) thrived in the Black Diamond area. Nearly 4 million tons of coal, “black diamonds,” were mined by over 900 miners, some as young as 8 years old. Coal mining operations ceased in 1906 due to rising production costs and new energy sources.

Sand Mining History

In the 1920s, underground sand mining began near the deserted coal mining townsites. The sand mines supplied sand to the Hazel-Atlas Glass Company in Oakland and the Columbia Steel Works in Pittsburg. Competition from Belgian glass sand and the closing of the steel foundry ended sand mining in the late 1940s.

Wildlife

Observant hikers may see the tracks of raccoons, skunks, opossums, rabbits, and deer, while birds of prey soar overhead. Mountain lions, bobcats, foxes, and coyotes are also occasionally spotted. Over 100 species of birds have been observed, from the meadowlark to the rare golden eagle. Several rare animal species have also been observed, including the white-tailed kite, the Alameda striped racer, the red-legged frog, and the California tiger salamander.

Vegetation

The Preserve’s vegetation includes grassland, foothill woodland, mixed evergreen forest, chaparral, stream vegetation, and exotic plantings and its hills are covered with stunning displays of wildflower in the spring. Additionally, several non-native tree species were introduced by miners and are still found today, including black locust, pepper tree, almond, eucalyptus, and tree of heaven.

Rose Hill Cemetery

The historic cemetery is a monument to the lives of former residents. Although more than 10 nationalities resided in the mining area, Rose Hill was a Protestant cemetery that served as the burial ground for many of the Welsh coal mining residents.
